New Project Checklist

Participation in the .NET Foundation exposes your project to the wider world of .NET developers and helps you to build a better community. If you would like to learn a bit more about what joining the .NET Foundation involves then please see the guidance below. To start the conversation about your project joining the .NET Foundation then fill out this simple survey to start the process.

When projects join the foundation, there are two ways that they can come in.

- License - The first is for the maintainers of the project to sign a contribution agreement licensing the code to the .NET Foundation under the terms of the open source license and confirming that they have the rights to do that. This type of agreement is most common when projects have had a long history of being open source, with lots of contribution from many different individuals and the project community now wish to now be supported by the .NET Foundation.
- Assignment - The other is to assign the copyright of the project to the .NET Foundation and confirm that they have the rights to do this. This type of agreement is usually used when releasing something as open source for the first time or by a project that has had a high degree of control over contributions to the existing project in the past.

.NET Contributor? Become a member!

Anyone who has contributed to a .NET Foundation project can apply to become a member.

Contributions may include code contributions, documentation, or other significant project contribution, including evangelism, teaching, code, organizing events, etc. If in doubt, please ask us at contact@dotnetfoundation.org!

How to join

- Any individual contributor to a .NET Foundation project can apply to become a member. Contributions may include code contributions, documentation, or other significant project contribution, including evangelism, teaching, code, organizing events, etc. If in doubt, please ask us at contact@dotnetfoundation.org
- Upon approval, members will be notified with information on completing their membership. We're requesting $100 annual dues, with liberal waivers for students or financial hardship.
- Each year, we'll host an election for the board of directors. Any active member can campaign for a one year term, based on their community standing, plans
